THE SHORTEST WAY HOME.

"The shortest way home by half a mile-I come so very o'ten by it— Is up the road, across the stile, And through the meadow. Shall we try i The days are not without a charm When, talking soft and looking silly, My love and I walked arm and arm. The lanes were lone and fields were stilly.

We found so many things to say, That always, in the shiny weather, We took the-well, the shorter way. To be a longer time together. We spoke about (but goodness knows Our topics of confabiliation) About the weather, I suppose, The crops, the barvest, and the nation.

At all events, although the talk Was neither wise nor witty. We ended each successive walk With, "Home already—what a pity!" We might have lost a little ground Through coming by the road selected, But both agreed that we had found The journey shorter than expected.

Can life's experiment support
The paradox that love proposes?
Does any path seem very short.
Unless it be a path of roses?
We seldom find the near way, And if we hit upon and take it. By creeping on from to-day It seems as long as length can make it.

The way to wealth is dull and dreary All earthly routes in my belief,
Are very long and very weary.
Nay—one that leads through care and strife Is short, when mortals once begin it; We take the "near cut" out of life, Although we take the rongest in it.

At the housewarming all Ashland had eagerly assisted, whence it was well known that the furnishing was elegant, and many longing wishes to reign in the mansion as mistress, filled the heads of aspiring damsels. But Dr. Deane, uniformly polite to everybody, showed no marked preference, and when invited to parties managed either to avoid attending or else to be only Aunt Rachel's escort; so the sighing damsels turned their hopes in other directions. All his life Dr. Reginald had dreamed of a home that should be "sweet," and he fancied the wife that should sit opposite to him at table and fireside; but he hated care and responsibility, thought to gain the "home" lishing Aunt Rachel where "a wifwould have perhaps given more pleasure, to be sure, but she would demand
